

Thank You For Coming To Plank

Plank closed last Saturday after what I feel was a very successful run. I attended all but one of the 17 performances (I'm sorry, but if you were at the Sunday, September 10th matinee we didn't get a chance to meet because that day I heard the siren call of the Ocean, jumped in my truck, and drove to Race Point.)

One of my very favorite things about this production was meeting all of you, hearing your responses to the play, and even hearing some of your own stories. I know a few of you were just passing through Boston that day and were looking for something to do that night, learned about us, and chose Plank. I know a number of you live on the Cape and made the drive to Boston to see the show. And then there was the couple who Googled, "plays about climate change" and found us that way.

I tried to thank each of you personally as you left the theater for attending Plank, but just in case I missed you, I'd like to say right now, thank you so much for taking time to see the show.

I hope you enjoyed the play, and I hope our paths cross again someday. As for Alley Cat Theater, right now I'm tying up the loose ends of the production, and you might get a kick out of knowing I have left Facebook after 10 years and am enjoying a little peace of mind. And I still don't own an iPhone. Potpee would be proud.

Again, thank you so much for supporting Plank, Alley Cat Theater, and new work in Boston.
